Website of the American Jewish Archives Selected for Inclusion in Library of Congress' 'Single Site' Project, Featuring Historic Collections of Internet Materials

Honor underscores historical significance of AJA's holdings

CINCINNATI, OH:--- The United States Library of Congress has selected the website of the Jacob Rader Marcus Center of the American Jewish Archives (AJA) — www.americanjewisharchives.org —for inclusion in its new Single Site project. The goal of the project is to harvest and archive historic websites covering a diverse array of topics selected by recommending librarians from the Library of Congress. The AJA website features extensive online exhibitions, catalogs, major manuscript and genealogical collections, educational resources, videos, microfilm records, multi-media presentations and more.

The Library's traditional functions—acquiring, cataloging, preserving and serving collection materials of historical importance to the Congress and to the American people to foster education and scholarship—extend to digital materials, including websites. Web archives are important because they contribute to the historical record, capturing information that could otherwise be lost. Records of historic events could be considered incomplete without materials that were 'born digital' and never printed on paper.

The Library of Congress requested permission to collect the internet materials from the AJA's website and add it to the Library's research collections. The content will be harvested from the website by the Web Archiving Team at the Library of Congress. The collected content will then become available to researchers both onsite at the Library facilities, and on the Library's website at <http://www.loc.gov/webarchiving/>.

"This request by the Library of Congress to collect our website underscores the tremendous historical significance of the vast assets of the American Jewish Archives," said Dr. Gary P. Zola, Executive Director of the AJA and Professor of the American Jewish Experience at Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion. "The AJA contains the world's largest catalogued collection of documents and materials pertaining to the history of North American Jewry, and as such, its noteworthy contents contribute much to the Library's mission to preserve a universal collection of knowledge for future generations."
